

PRINTtips

Graphics

Printing

Mailing

Under One Roof

TechneGraphics, Inc.
Park 50 TechneCenter
2002 Ford Circle
Milford, OH 45150
(513) 248-2121
Fax (513) 248-5141

Web site:
www.techgra.com

File Transfer site:
www.tgidirect.net

FTP site:
ftp.techgra.com

Email:
info@techgra.com

Would you like more tips?

Try our weekly email newsletter – Tuesday Tips. To be added to the mailing list, send a request to:
info@techgra.com

Writing Great Headlines Go to the Head of the Class

In a previous issue of Printtips we discussed the importance of headlines for establishing interest in sales-related copy. As we mentioned then, advertising legend David Ogilvy is often quoted about the importance of headlines:

“On average, five times as many people read the headlines as read the body copy. It follows that unless your headline sells your product, you have wasted 90 per cent of your money.”

The headlines which work best are those which promise the reader a benefit—like a whiter wash, more miles per gallon, freedom from pimples, fewer cavities. Rifle through a magazine and count the number of ads whose headlines promise a benefit of any kind.

Headlines which contain news are sure-fire. The news can be the announcement of a new product, an improvement in an old product, or a new way to use an old product—like serving Campbell’s Soup on the rocks. On the average, ads with news are recalled by 22% more people than ads without news.”

From Ogilvy on Advertising, 1985

Claude Hopkins, another advertising industry legend and author of Scientific Advertising (originally published in 1923), said, “We pick out what we wish to read by headlines.”

The importance of a headline

Regardless of whether a headline appears above advertising copy, on the front page of a newspaper or the cover of a magazine, or in a newsletter, its purpose is the same: to engage the reader’s interest enough to move ahead with the accompanying text. Well-written headlines exemplify the AIDA principle of advertising in miniature – attract the reader’s attention; promote interest and desire in continuing to read; and act on the desire.

The goal of good headline writing is to stir emotion in the reader and create excitement while the reader imagines enjoying the benefits of your product or service. This is best done by succinctly stating the unique selling proposition in the headline.

Great headlines begin with research

Until you know a great deal about the target audience, you won’t be able to write a compelling headline. This is because the headline must be tailored to elicit an emotional response from the reader, and answer the question, “What’s in it for me?” from the reader’s perspective.

Research is also required to generate good body copy, so the time spent getting to know the target audience will reap double rewards.

Writing Great Headlines (continued)

Headline types

There are four headline types that have a good track record of selling products and services: how to, a question, top reasons, and testimonial. Each is effective by appealing to the buyer in a different way.

- How To: A “how to” headline promises a solution to a problem and evokes a natural curiosity to learn the method. Familiar examples of a “how to” headline address the problem of ceasing to smoke or losing weight. Although a “how to” headline might actually begin with the words how to, it could also begin The secret of . . . or See how easy it is to . . . or Little known ways to . . .

- Question: A “question” headline poses a question that the target audience wants answered, such as Do you make these mistakes? or Are you spending too much on . . .?

The focus of the question is always a benefit for the reader.

- Top Reasons: A “top reasons” headline promises an explanation for something of interest to the reader. Examples are Four ways to stop smoking or The top ten reasons students fail. A “top reasons” headline can be posed as a question, such as Do you know the 3 warning signs for diabetes?

- Testimonial: A “testimonial” headline uses the words of a satisfied customer to convey a benefit. It works because it adds veracity to the claims you make about your product or service. To indicate the headline is a testimonial, use quotation marks to enclose the customer’s words: “Now I have a driveway I’m proud of”.

Ways to start a headline

John Caples, the advertising great who is #21 on AdAge’s list of Top 100 People of the 20th Century, devotes five of 18 chapters in his book Tested Advertising Methods to writing headlines. In it he offers 29 formulas for writing good headlines.

Caples wrote that effective headlines often begin with key words that are proven to attract a reader’s interest. Here is a list of key words:

| | |
|-------------|--------|
| Introducing | You |
| Announcing | Your |
| Now | Who |
| At Last | People |
| Finally | Want |
| How To | Easy |
| Why | Simple |
| Which | Money |
| This | Free |
| New | |

Headline content

If your offer is particularly compelling, consider featuring it in the headline. Some examples of a compelling offer are price (or reduced price), payment plan, or bonus with purchase.

You can also include the unique selling proposition (USP) in the headline. To qualify as a USP, the headline will have to explain a specific benefit that is not being offered by competitors.

The headline can make a promise (i.e., Learn to speak Spanish in 8 weeks) which can also be backed up by a guarantee (or we’ll refund your money.) Finally, the headline can appeal directly to the target audience – Attention college students.

Practice makes perfect

There is only one way to write great headlines: practice. Since a headline is built around the benefits of the product or service, start by brainstorming all the benefits of each feature. Record those on a sheet of paper.

Now pick a benefit and write a series of headlines in each major headline category (how-to, question, top reasons, testimonial). Write enough headlines in each category to use all the opening words mentioned earlier in this article. Aim for at least 30 headlines in each category.

Headline appearance

A few final words to ensure your headlines will be eye-catching: pay attention to how they appear on the page. For example, look at line lengths. It is best to have each line of approximately the same length. Similarly, in multi-line headlines, avoid line breaks that split an infinitive. Strive to keep punctuation, except for hyphens and dashes, at the end of a line.

“A ‘how to’ headline promises a solution to a problem...”

“If your offer is particularly compelling, consider featuring it in the headline.”

Writing Effective Teaser Copy

Much of the information about writing effective headlines can be applied to writing teaser copy for direct mail marketing or for the text appearing inside a Johnson Box. After all, the goal is the same: to engage the interest of the reader so he will continue to read the text.

For a direct mail marketing piece that does not have the look of a personalized letter, we recommend using teaser copy on the envelope. Teaser copy is information that is printed on the outside of a mail piece.

Some people object to using teaser copy because it identifies the mail piece as advertising mail. However, well-written teaser copy can increase response rate by creating desire to open the mail piece to see what's inside.

According to direct mail marketing expert "Rocket" Ray Jutkins and author of Power Direct Marketing, here are seven tips for writing effective teaser copy:

- Make sure the teaser relates to the offer. Don't mislead the customer just to get them to look inside.
- Think benefits with teaser copy. No benefit, no reason for the audience to look inside.
- Urge action. A call to action should always be in your teasers, something like "Limited Offer."
- Tie the teaser copy on the outside to what's on the inside. Make sure it does. The audience will better understand what you are offering.
- Ensure the graphics and copy work well together. Make sure they complement the issue, not confuse it.
- Give teaser copy a "YOU" attitude. Explain what the customer will gain in his language. And don't speak at him or to him, but speak with him.

"... well-written teaser copy can increase response rate by creating desire to open..."

Q. How do the rules of grammar and punctuation apply to headlines?

A. Because a good headline eliminates unnecessary words and focuses on one compelling idea, the rules of grammar and punctuation as applied to headlines are designed to promote reader comprehension. Here are some guidelines:

- Use active voice. In grammar, voice is the relationship between the verb and the nouns associated with it (called the subject or the object of the verb). There are two voices in English – active and passive. Active voice, in which the subject of the sentence performs the action, is preferred for headlines because it is clearer and more succinct than passive voice.

- Use present tense. Tense is the indication of the time at which the event described by the sentence occurred. In English this is a property of the verb and may be either past, present, or future. In headlines, use present tense for immediate past events; past tense for more distant events, and future tense for coming events.
- Use numerals. Unlike text, numbers are allowed at the beginning of a headline and do not have to be spelled out if below 10. An exception is the number one.
- Use a comma in place of the word "and". In addition to its normal use, a comma may be used in place of and in a headline. Example: GM, Chrysler Open Talks
- Use short words. Find a short synonym for a long word. For example, panel or group is better in a headline than committee. And remember that adjectives are usually not needed.

"In headlines, use present tense for immediate past events..."

Create a Swipe File

In past issues of Printips we have introduced the idea of a swipe file, which simply put, is a collection of noteworthy examples of best practices. We've suggested that newsletter editors create a swipe file of possible articles; that marketing directors create a swipe file of eye-catching display ads; and that direct mail marketers create a swipe file of persuasive mailing pieces.

A swipe file is also relevant to headline writing. The basic tenet of effective headline writing is just that - a few rules and a proven formula that results in a convincing headline. By noticing and saving headlines that strike you as particularly effective, you will begin to understand how the tenets translate into an actual headline.

A swipe file provides a concrete illustration of what works and what doesn't, of what you prefer and what you don't. It helps you understand the possibilities, and offers practical instruction of how the rules are used. By mimicking what has been

Please Route to the Printing Buyer

513-248-2121
Fax 513-248-5141
www.techgra.com
info@techgra.com

TECHNE GRAPHICS INC.

2002 Ford Circle
Mifflord, OH 45150

Go to the Head
of the Class:
Writing Great Headlines

successful, you'll develop your own style more quickly.

Do remember, though, that a swipe file is meant to be a source of inspiration, not examples to be plagiarized. The goal is not to copy successful work, but to adapt it to your own headline writing requirements.